300. [illegible]
'Tambu' or 'whale teeth money'. Small size with woven native carrying cord 32" Very old 35.00

301. Same but large tooth7" split in half 50.00

302. Same but complete large tooth 7" 50.00

* The first whale teeth came from trade with the Fijians who took canoes and bird feathers in exchange. Every native who is head of a family has a number of 'tambus' put away and they are very important as a standard of value in high social life. They are used in large purchases, buying wives and in certain of the ceremonies. The older the 'tambu' and the deeper the color the higher their value. These are very old from Australian ports.

381. [illegible]

About [illegible]..... One day in browsing in an old book shop I ran across an old copy of National Geographic which contained a picture showing the native on Tanimbar Island with a large roll of [illegible]. Had never heard of such a thing. Wrote to President Harvard who supplied the name of several members of the expedition. Tried to contact them but after two years finally located one who was publishing a small newspaper in India. He did not have his records but remembered there was one old white man on this small island and gave us his name. I wrote author if a roll of this rare money could be bought. He replied that a roll was available but would not be bought but could be had in trade. He asked a certain sum in English pounds be credited to his account in a New Zealand bank (his share - presumed) and took I only his [illegible] of [illegible], [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] roll and a few other items I have forgotten. In about six months I received a beautiful full roll (Lot 381) about 18 feet long, horse inches wide and made of the tiny red topknot feathers of the tiny honeyeire which are mounted one on the other on a mass of hibiscus root. These tiny birds (smaller than our humming 'bird') are caught by placing sticky lime on the branches of trees. The tiny feathers of the head are plucked out and the bird released. 420. " two large mesocopus or the 'bagi' shell with deep red edge from which'bagi' are made 10.00

NOTE: Here we have a perfect example of the 'law of supply and demand'. White shells of all sizes could be found on any beach and to make money from them required skill time and labor but the deep red shell was found only in a certain locality and had to be 'traded' for. This red shell was the 'gold' standard money of these islands.
